This Week's Question

Should companies be allowed to defend themselves from cyber-crooks by being allowed to “hack back”—using hacker-like techniques to recover stolen intellectual property and frustrate their assailants?

- A) Yes, digital defenses such as firewalls are no match for criminal organizations and state-sponsored hackers
- B) No, instead of fighting back companies can do a better job of protecting themselves from hackers
- C) No, allowing digital vigilantism will only make the situation worse
